SABER PORTO

To whom it may concern,

It is my pleasure to recommend Leonardo Neves as a Game Developer. I have had the opportunity to work with Leonardo during his internship at Saber Porto, where he demonstrated a natural aptitude for programming and a genuine passion for game development.

While Leonardo is still in the early stages of his technical career, he possesses something that cannot be taught: raw curiosity and an unwavering commitment to improvement. When Leonardo first joined us, he had a solid grasp of the fundamentals of coding, but his real strength was in how he approached problems he didn't yet know how to solve.

I was consistently impressed by his ability to troubleshoot independently: when encountering a bug or a system he didn't understand, Leonardo would first research and experiment on his own before asking for help. Moreover, his willingness to accept and implement feedback: during code reviews, Leonardo never took criticism personally. Instead, he would take notes, ask clarifying questions, and return with a revised solution that showed he had truly absorbed the lesson. Finally, his collaborative nature: he was always eager to assist other team members, even with menial tasks, just to get a better understanding of how the full development pipeline works. As an example, during our recent project, Leonardo was tasked with implementing a data-driven entity component system. The initial version was functional but lacked optimization. When this was pointed out, Leonardo spent the weekend studying optimization techniques and came back on Monday with a version that was significantly more efficient. This proactive attitude is rare, even in seasoned developers.

Leonardo is acutely aware that he still has much to learn about the industry, and he is not looking for a position where he can coast, he is looking for a place where he can be challenged and mentored. He has the foundational skills required to contribute immediately, but more importantly, he has the mindset to grow into a senior developer over time.

I am confident that Leonardo will be a positive and productive addition to your team. He is coachable, hardworking, and genuinely loves the craft of making games. Please feel free to contact me if you have any further questions regarding his candidacy.

Sincerely,

José Felgueiras
